TALES OF AN OLD SEXTON The Midnight Apparition.

O treacherons night!
Then land'st thy ready wal to every treason!
And teeming mischief thrives beneath thy shade.
—Askey Hith.

Mr. Colebrook was dead. He was a rich man, yet a slight acquaintance with him would have convinced even a superficial observer that he was not a happy man. He was misanthropic in his views though he had the reputation in the street of being a kind-hearted and benevolent man. Every day seemed to usher him into the arena of a new strife with the powers of a new misery. Apparently he was tired of life, and impatiently waited for the hour that had now come, and which would place him beyond the trials and woes of this sublunary existence.

And yet many could remember when he was a gay and cheerful person. Before his existence.

And yet many could remember when he was a gay and cheerful person. Before his marriage with a poor but beautiful girls some seven years before his death, he had worn a sunny smile, and his life seemed to him a pleasant dream.

Though only thirty-five when he married, people said there was too much difference between his own age and that of his wife, who was, I believe, about twenty-two, From one extreme she went to the other. She had been poor, and forced to content herself with but few of the luxnries and gayeties of life; but now she was rich, and her indulgent husband gave her free access to his coffers. Wealth fostered pride, and Mrs. Colebrook became a leader of fashion—the gayest of the gay. Her beauty and her influential position in society made her a queen, and hor smile was courted by the brilliant and the dissolute. The house when she was at home was always filled with gay gallants and lordly ladies.

All the world could see this, and the next ways filled with gay gallants and lordly ladies.

All the world could see this, and the next thing it saw, was, that Mr. Colebrook grew sad and melancholy; that his wife looked coldly at him, and there was little, if any, sympathy between them. Then people said the poor man had married badly, and the croakers all "knew that it would be so."

Mr. Colebrook was dead. Whatever woes had weighed him down, he was beyond their reach now. People said he had died of a broken heart; that the whirl of pieasure in his own home had been a hell to him; and that his gay wife had been a scorpion who stung him to desth.

For my part, I pay but little attention to the busy longue of gossip. I account all it says, whether good or bad, as mere siander. Whatever stories I had heard concerning Mrs. Colebrook—and I had heard many—passed "in at one ear and out at the other."

"Mr. Mortal," said a man at my door.

"That is my name."

gasped, looking engerly at me.

"Watch with him?" asked Dr. Browne, HOLLAND HERRING, surprise.

"It is entirely unnecessary."
"The corpse must have watchers," she added more calmly than she had yet spoken.

"But it seems so neglectful to describe body as soon as the spirit has fled." "It is entirely a matter of choice," I added.

After ordering the coffin for the deceased—for at that time they were not kept on hand to such an, extent as they are now—and attending to my private affairs, I again repaired to the Colebrook mansion.

It was customary at that time of which I write, for two persons to perform the service for which I was, engaged, though watching was then rapidly going out of fushion; but, as my business was with the dead, I was porfectly at home in the chamber of death, and was even better satisfied to be aione than with company.

I had brought an interesting book from home, and Mrs. Colebrook had provided a very interesting repeat for me in the daining-room below, so that I looked forward to a very comfortable night. Throwing myself into the large rocking chair, which had been placed there for my use, I was soon engaged in the entertaining pages of my book. As often as the clock struck, I arose and examined the corpus, moletening the face with alcohol, and witted engaged in the entertaining pages of my book. As often as the clock struck, I arose and examined the corpas, moistening the face with alcohol, and wiped away the purging at the mouth.

At cleven o'clock some one entered the house and came up stairs. They were the feet of a man, and I heard time enter the parlor adjoining the room of death Though it seemed a rather singular circumstance that a man should enter the house at that hour of the night, I thought nothing more of it till I heard voices, engaged in earnest conversation. In a few minutes they grew louder and more distinct, and I recognized the voice of Dr. Browne. Perhaps Mrs. Colebrook was sick and needed his assistance. But he spoke not in the tones of his profession. The other person spoke in a whisper; but the other person spoke in his natural voice, and seemed to be under no restraint.

CONCLUDED TO-MORROW,

One of the Results.

One of the Results.

Many credulent people believed the fallacy that when slavery was once abolished that act would put an end to the everlasting agitation of the negro question; but thus has proven that such an attempt only aggravates the cyll. Many persons now think that if the right of suffrage was conferred upon the negroes, the problem would be selved, and the vexed question put at rest forever. This expectation would prove as groundless and hopeless as the other. Grant the negroes the right of suffrage and they would hold the balance of power between the parties in the country, and consequently control it. We should have a black party of a million of voters ruling thirty millions of white people. They would be led and controlled by the most abandoned Abolition demagogues, and they would be led and controlled by the most abandoned Abolition demagogues, and they would be led and controlled by the fost aboution innaties that the black race is superior to the white race would be realized to the extent of having a big negro or mulatto running for President and beating two or three white statesmen.

Thenty of such renagades as Chake, Butler, Phillips. Summer and Cox would be found bidding for the leadership of the black party, and buying negro votes as they buy blackberries in the market, by the basket full. Every Abolitionist would have two votes—his own and his nigger's. The elective franchise would become a mockery and a humbug, and the white people would be delivered over to a black despotiam the most galling and degrading. How long would such a state of affairs be en-

"Mr. Colebrook!" I exclaimed, for the intelligence was very unexpected to me as well as to the whole city, when it was announced,
I had heard that he was suffering from an attach of billious colle; but it had not been even rumored that he was dangerously sick.

"Yes, he is dead," replied the man; "and Mrs. Colebrook wishes you to make huste."
